Joburg Municipality warns residents to make sure to store sufficient water this weekend

06 February 2015

Water supplies to some Soweto, Johannesburg and surrounding areas will be disrupted and residents have been warned to store enough water for usage this weekend while renovations are being implemented to the Rand Water main water supply pump station in Eikenhof.

The city's water and sanitation service provider, Johannesburg Water, would like to inform residents about a planned water disruption that will affect a number of areas in the Johannesburg region from 2pm on 7 February until 3pm on 8 February 2015.

The interruption is to allow Rand Water to do maintenance at the Eikenhof pump station located in Johannesburg South. "Please note the water supply disruption is expected to last 25 hours. Rand Water will continue to supply water into our system at a reduced capacity but there might be poor pressures and no water supply experienced in those areas during this service interruption," it said in a statement.

Johannesburg Water said there will be tanks provided at the hospitals listed below.
